

Shari L. Gould

Shari L. Gould is the founding member of Publishing Writes. She has more than 20 years editorial, journalism and publishing experience. For much of the last 15 years, Shari has been working with high-tech companies documenting everything from their network designs and installations, through software design and APIs, to User Interfaces.

Shari Gould is a freelance journalist and writer. She has more than 20 years' experience in technology journalism and technical documentation writing, and is well published in numerous online and printed publications. Shari currently writes telecommunications, software, and security articles for DevX.com, Software Development Times, and has written for other high-profile publications such as the former SunWorld and IBM DeveloperWorks. Look for articles and newsletters on this Web site in the near future. One of her articles that first appeared in SunWorld was then hand picked by Sun Microsystems for inclusion in its Solaris Developer Connection.